The Youtube video that I watched, entitled Mastering the Art of the Interview I learned some strategies specially the 3 strategies discuss in the video the 1st is the knowing your non-negotiable, identifying your strength and lastly the being able to find alignment through research that I use when I am in an interview for the position as intern for the company. The tips are good and strategic, especially for what attitudes I have, like my priority to connect my motivations and such include being truthful, having integrity, showing respect to others, and taking care of your health and wellbeing. You can make decisions with confidence and stay loyal to what is most important to you if you have a clear grasp of your non-negotiables. Knowing your strengths can help you improve in your current position and help you spot areas where you can improve. We can ensure that you are working in a position that promotes your personal and professional progress by conducting research to find your career's alignment. Additionally, it can assist you in avoiding accepting a position that might not be a suitable fit for you, resulting in improved job satisfaction and a more fruitful career.
